In a recent article covering South African children's literature, Thomas van der Walt said that 'It was expected that with the change in government in 1994 and the elevation of the African languages to official status, there would be a marked development of children's literature in the African languages, but for several reasons this has not yet occurred. Many institutions and people are actively engaged in trying to promote the creation of children's literature in the African languages.' (Van der Walt, p.124.)

The efforts of publishers, organisations and individuals to bring books to young South African children in their mother tongue so that they can begin to develop a love of books and a culture of reading from an early age is to be applauded. And it is these efforts and the books that have been published as a result that are highlighted in the accompanying list of picture books, available in the three official languages of the Western Cape - English, Afrikaans and isiXhosa. This list was drawn up in response to a specific request from an ex-librarian who is involved with a library in an informal settlement in Cape Town. Children from this community are twinned with those who attend a private school in a neighbouring suburb and they regularly help one another by reading a text in each other's home language. The isiXhosa-speaking children help the English speakers with their isiXhosa language skills and vice versa. In this way the literacy skills of each are enhanced and practiced with equal importance being attached to both languages and texts.

I started trawling through the PALS database and from the list that has been compiled, a number of conclusions can be drawn. For me most importantly the paucity of titles on this list points to the fact that we do not yet have a national children's literature, a common collection of indigenous texts that is available to our children in their mother tongue. But at the same time, this list points out something which I think is perhaps not acknowledged enough - the will and determination of so many to publish the books that will eventually form this national literature. Each book here has a story to tell - the story of its birth and the dreams, hopes and aspirations of its parents and godparents who brought it into this world. There are the authors, the illustrators, the editors, the translators, the publishers and many others who believe in the importance of books for children and books in their mother tongue.

Amongst the titles on this list are:

- ☺ translations of picture books that originated in Europe and America, bringing some of the best of the world's literature to our children in a language that they can read, for example, Hungry Hyena by Mwenye Hadithi and Liz Rosenberg's The carousel;
- ☺ original picture books by South Africans that in translation reach the widest possible audience, building up our common literary heritage, for example, Niki Daly's Not so fast Songololo and Lulama's magic blanket by Mari Grobler;
- ☺ books that were made possible by the funding and/or support given by publishers by distribution agencies such as Biblionef, for example, Hiltje Vink's Brenda has a dragon in her blood; and last, but not least,
- ☺ books that were made possible by the fact that this library service purchased them in sufficient quantities to make their production possible.
